“ Our sweet precious angel, We all have so much to say. How is it even possible that you've been gone almost a year. NO NO this must still be that horrible nightmare that we can't wake up from. Its so hard to believe that in 9 days we will have some how, some way made it through this first horrible year with out your sassy smiling face. A year ago the 22nd you gained your tiny little wings. I imagine them to be some of the brightest, sassiest, sparkling, glittery, bold and beautiful colorful wings God could ever have thought of giving a heart like yours. Cause lets face it we all know not any pearly white wings would do you, not with your personality. I know from time to time you come by to pay visit. Your mom and siblings they've been amazingly so strong and the rest of us we made it through. But, I got to confess there are those days when ever thing reminds us you and that you had to go way to quickly for anyone's liking. Some days I know the boys are missing you cause they sit with me and look through your pictures. There's days it seems like every story has a little memory of why we love you so much. Or we might be watching Daniel or Farnanda but its like you're the one looking back at us, mean mug us or scrunching that little nose as you' give us sugas. So as the first year without you draws to a close. We will be sure to share with others especially your siblings our most fondest, sacred memories & stories some complete with a toys or pictures. We will share the hugs, tight embraces, laughter and wipe each others tears away as we make it clear we will never let you really go after all this life here is our temporary home. Now if we happen to yell a little too its ok were just making room in our heart to let your wings grow a little more.

after all you'll need to be super strong for the day we see you again. you'll have so much to teach us and the stories you'll share with us of all the people you've got to met and help along the way. We love you princess sassy pants.

Love your Auntie J
