“ Even as the sunbeam is composed of millions of minute rays, the home-life must be constituted of little tendernesses, kind looks, sweet laughter, gentle words, and loving counsels. It must not be like the torch blaze of natural excitement, which is easily quenched, but like the serene, chastened light, which burns as safely in the dry wind as in the stillest atmosphere. Let each bear the other's burden the while; let each cultivate the mutual confidence which is a gift capable of increase and improvement, and soon it will be found that kindness will spring up on every side, displacing unsuitability and gifting us all, above all, with the pleasures of holiness, the blessed feeling of conscious pardon, the calm satisfaction of assured faith, the enriching comfort of heaven around us, heaven within us, heaven beyond us, heaven above us, and the bright and cheering prospect of the enjoyment of that heaven forever.

The sweetest type of heaven is home. Nay, heaven itself is the home for whose acquisition we are to strive most strongly. Home in one form or another is the great object of life. It stands at the end of every day's labor, and beckons us to its bosom no matter how far away; and life would be cheerless and meaningless did we not discern across the river that divides it from the life beyond glimpses of the pleasant mansions prepared for us. Yes, heaven is the home towards which those who have lived aright direct their steps when wearied by the toils of life. There the members of the homes on earth, separated here, will meet again, to part no more.

The noon of day is long past and the full sun is slowly descending the western sky. We strain our eyes to pierce the veil and see what lies beyond in vain but the horizon is invisible, a haze of fleecy clouds hangs before it as a curtain. Behind all is clear—mountains scaled, hills climbed, highways trod, and home. It is the land of yesterday. This narrow strip, on which we stand we call today. Pondering, we gaze at the shadowy clouds, gathering a reflex from the descending day, as they assume a golden glow.

Who is there who has ever looked up to the “golden gates of the resplendent west,” and beheld them arrayed in all their magnificence, and watched the beautiful departure of the lord of day, and not felt himself lifted from earth to heaven, and his feelings spiritualized by the contemplation of the scene? The glories of sunset can be seen and enjoyed in their greatest fullness only in the hope of the enjoyment of that heaven forever.

The winds are now hushed among the foliage□the birds of heaven have ceased their warbling, the voice of the laborer is no longer heard□silence hangs like a canopy upon the scene and our day in the sun has ended. The evening shadows gather; a gentle wind lifts the misty veil, a bright star appears upon the far horizon, and to the unspoken question of the soul, the murmuring voices whisper, Family, Friends, Forever! “Welcome Home”

Amen! David A. Young
