“ So many beautiful memories of Dad. He gave us everything. He gave to his family, his community, strangers, and friends. He would give $2 bills to every two years old he ran into. He always had mints in his pocket to offer someone. He gave strong handshakes and strong hugs. He also had an unusual physical strength for his size. He would get frustrated as he got older and the physical strength would weaken, but his emotional and mental strength never faltered nor did his memory or intelligence. He thanked his crossword puzzles for that, as well as Jeopardy, the newspaper and news channels, history channels, discovery, reading, etc. He believed that our learning was never complete here on earth and that the world is much bigger than we will ever comprehend. He excepted people for who they are, not who he thought they should be, which was probably a survival mechanism he picked up raising four girls and living with mom.

He had so much love to give and gave it freely. I can only hope that I can be a fraction of his greatness.

With much love,

Peggy
