“ Verna was a great neighbor that I regret we did not really get to know well until late in her life. As her health declined, we were sad to lose the friendship that had grown. We knew her long enough to know how much she valued her family and that she cherished friendships. Many times she shared memories of fun times she had during her years working and with friends. As her health deteriorated, she talked more about her love for her first husband and things related to her children. She would show me pictures of her grandchildren and tell me stories about each one. Even though as I grew closer to her, I learned due to distance, her time with family was limited, listening to her talk about each of you made me feel like I knew you. Until her fall outside in the ice several winters ago, she loved going out to eat with us and was very witty and only a little confused. She was well taken care of during the final period of her life . So, for each and everyone of her family- as long as her memory allowed - she shared about each of you and she did love you. Please keep her memory alive in the younger generations by sharing a happy thought connected to her as your own children are older. Try to have some small memento to treasure her memory.
