“ Virginia Castleman was one of the most influential and impactful people I have ever known. I would not be where I am in life today without her, both as a my teacher and mentor at Clarksville High School. Her dedication to her profession and the drive she instilled in her students transformed me from a lazy and apathetic student into a highly motivated person on a path toward college and law school. Without her guidance, I doubt I would have otherwise taken that path. A dear and unique person who will be greatly missed. Sincere condolences to the family.

“ I first met Ginger in 1995 before our law school entrance exam, and the first person I saw when I entered the law school building to attend was Ginger. We became close friends, studied in the library with 3 other ladies for all 3 years. Since graduation in 1999 we began having dinner once a month to stay in touch. We were proud of our 21 year record especially because there were 30 years difference among our ages declared ourselves but friends forever. One humorous memory. - after finishing our first year of law, we celebrated by traveling to England, Wales, and Scotland and had a blast, Ginger was a great traveler and a good sport. Our friends got a big kick about us telling them about having to drag our luggage around the huge pasture at Stonehenge. our bus was returning too soon for us to see everything - We shared many a laugh when retelling this episode as it also started to rain on us.
